

Flushing and Long Island Newspapers, 1821-1904
Black and Native American Communities

Alphabetical Name Index
Personal Names, Associations, Institutions, and Organizations

Index Sources

This index is based on transcription volumes from the Flushing Journal, Long Island City Weekly Star, Long Island Farmer, and Newtown Register, compiled by the historian Vincent F. Seyfried and available at the Archives at Queens Public Library. For a list of the volumes, see Sources at the end of this document.

The transcription volumes are incomplete; many issues of these newspapers have been lost or damaged. It is also important to note that the transcriptions include only “the articles that, in the opinion of the author, seemed historically important or shed significant light on the social, economic and cultural life of old Queens.”^[1].

Because the Seyfried volumes contain a mix of transcriptions and hand-annotated photocopies of the microfilms, dates and pagination are sometimes unclear. Such cases are indicated in this index by question marks. A few reports not indexed by Seyfried were also found due to their presence on photocopied pages. These are indicated as “not indexed.”

For scholarly citation and quotation, it is recommended to consult the microfilms. As of January 2024, these issues have not been digitized and must be viewed at the Archives. For available issues, consult the newspaper index and contact the Archives.

Index Content

This index includes individuals, associations, institutions, and organizations with a direct connection to the Black and Native American communities in Flushing: community members, clergy, teachers, visiting speakers and musicians, churches, schools, benevolent associations, political associations, etc.

Entries under two of Seyfried's topical categories were not transcribed. Camp meeting notices and reports were skipped, on the grounds of too little substantive information. Crime reports were not included on the grounds that the veracity of the accusations cannot be determined, and because descendants of the community have no means of redress for harm caused.

Individuals are indexed under their full and proper names, with professional names, nicknames, and names before marriage also listed. In many cases, the proper names are not present in the newspaper reports. Individuals, associations, institutions, and organizations listed below are also indexed topically in Flushing and Long Island Newspapers, 1821-1904: Black and Native American Communities—Topical Index.

Content Warning

These newspaper reports contain terms referring to Black people and Native Americans that were in common use in the 19th and early 20th centuries and are now considered offensive and racist.

Terms used in names (Colored School, Colored Cemetery) and content descriptions have been preserved in this index for historical accuracy and to facilitate searching across the topical and name indexes and the text transcription document.
